FORT ERIE RESULTS.

FORT ERIE RACE TRACK, Ont.

Frank H. Warner Killed Pretty Esther Norling, Fought Off His Pursuers, and Slipped Through Cordon of Bluecoats.

BRAWNY TRUCKMAN LAYS HIM. LOW WITH BALE HOOK.

Entered Office and Fired Three Times at John C. Wilson, Who Was in the Act of Giving Him $10 He Requested as a Loan.

The stupidity of a crowd of policemen who failed to properly guard the Spalding Building at No. 39 West Forty-second street, in which Frank H. Warner, who had just killed Esther Norling, a cashier, had taken refuge, allowed the escape of the murderer to-day and a subsequent attempt on his part to kill John C. Wilson, of the firm of John C. Wilson & Co., hat manufacturers, at Waverley place and Greene street. Mr. Wilson is in St. Vincent's Hospital with the chances against his recovery. He was shot through the right kidney. Warner is in the prison ward of Bellevuc Hospital suffering from wounds inflicted by Jake Rose, a truckman, who captured him with the aid of a steel bale

The first shooting occurred in the doorway of the haberdashery of William G. White at No. 3 West Forty-second street at 7.30 o'clock. Miss Norling was employed there as cashier. She formerly worked for Warner, who ran a hat store at No. 15 East Forty-second street and went into bankruptcy about eighteen months ago. Miss Norling had her savings invested in the business and lost them in the smash.

PRETTY VICTIM DECLINED TO MARRY Warner was in love with her and wanted her to marry him and to him up in business again. She gave him her final answer some days ago, and it was a refusal. Fortified with whiskey, he waited for her to-day. In his pocket he had a .38-calibre five-chambered pistol and a collection of desperate and sensational struggle in Forty-second street, in which he fired three shots at his pursuers. Policemen followd him as far as the stairway of the building, and he fired more shots. After that he was not molested.

While the guardians of the peace held a muss meeting in front of the Spalding Building, anad a crowd numbering thousands looked on and waited impatiently for some action, Warner was crouched in an angle of the stairway anticipating pursuit. He waited for nearly three-quarters of an hour. No policemen appearing to capture him, he made his way through a rear window, climbed down a fire-escape, and walked through a garage into Forty-third street, just a block from the scene of his crime.

There were no policemen on guard there. Warner walked to Sixth ave ue and started south. While the policemen wrangled in front of the Spaiding Building he passed half a block away, bound for the wholesale hat district, where he was well known.

This district lies to the west of Broadway and about Washington Square, Warner was without even carfare. While word of his crime was telephoned to police stations all over the city and wild instructions were sent out to arrest him he trudged down Sixth avenue with his loaded revolver in his

It was just 11 o'clock when he walked into the office of the Wilson concern, which has factories in South Norwalk, Conn., and Orange, N. J. In his days of prosperity Warner had bought heavily from the Wilson house, as he had in fact from most of the wholesalers downtown. He was wall known Twelve Said to Be Buried, but to the trade as "Charlie" Warner, a man who had been put down and out

"All right," said Mr. Wilson, arising and starting for the safe. Warner's mind was in a whirl from his awful experience in Forty-second street. As he saw Mr. Wilson move away the impression undoubtedly R.H.E. shook the neighborhood.
